Johnny Appleseed

When he was born, his parents named him John Chapman. John grew up in a big family. There were eleven other children, and it must have been noisy at times. John liked to walk in the woods where it was quiet. When he was older, he left home to tell people about God. Someone gave him free apple seeds, so he began to plant the seeds. This is how he got his nickname, Johnny Appleseed. He went west to find more land and plant more seeds. People were going west to live, so Johnny sold little apple trees to the people. If the people did not have money, Johnny would trade them for food or clothes. If they were too poor, he would give them the little trees for free. Johnny walked from place to place, and many times people would invite him to stay for dinner. He usually slept outside under the stars. But he was happy because he was able to tell people about God and share apples with them too.
